TRACTS

OF THE PERIOD OF ENGLISH HISTORY COVERED BY THE REIGN OF CHARLES I., THE CIVIL WAR, AND THE COMMONWEALTH, 1625–1660.

WITH A ROYAL PROCLAMATION, IN FAC-SIMILE.

In 1889, William P. Upham, Esq., presented this Library with thirteen bound volumes, containing over two hundred works relating to the period above mentioned. These books once belonged to the Reverend Charles Wentworth Upham, and must have formed a part of the material upon which he drew in his historical studies.

In presenting the titles of the works given by Mr. Upham, it has seemed best to give in addition such works in the general collection, and especially in the Prince Library, as also bear upon the events, which relate so closely to the settlement and early history of Plymouth and the Massachusetts Bay. At the end of the list are given the few titles of Mr. Upham's gift, covering a later period. The Upham books may be recognized by the shelf-numbers, which range from H.87.2 to H.87.18.

London is understood to be the place of imprint, unless another place is mentioned.

¶ By the King.

¶ A Proclamation against the disorderly Transporting His Maiesties Subiects to the Plantations within the parts of America.

THe Kings most Excellent MAIESTIE being informed that great numbers of His Subiects haue bin, and are euery yeare transported into those parts of America, which haue been granted by Patent to seuerall persons, and there settle themselues, some of them with their families and whole estates: amongst which numbers there are also many idle and refractory humors, whose onely or principall end is to liue as much as they can without the reach of authority: His Maiestie hauing taken the premisses into consideration, is minded to restraine for the time to come such promiscuous and disorderly departing out of the Realme; And doth therefore straitly charge and command all and euery the Officers and Ministers of his seuerall Ports in England, Wales, and Barwick, That they doe not hereafter permit or suffer any persons, being Subsidie men, or of the value of Subsidie men, to embarque themselues in any of the said Ports, or the members thereof, for any of the said Plantations, without Licence from His Maiesties Commissioners for Plantations first had and obtained in that behalfe; Nor that they admit to be embarqued any persons under the degree or value of Subsidy-men, without an Attestation or Certificate from two Iustices of the Peace liuing next the place where the party last of all, or lately then before dwelt, that he hath taken the Oaths of Supremacie, and Allegiance, and like Testimony from the Minister of the Parish of his conuersation and conformity to the Orders and discipline of the Church of England. And further his Maiesties expresse will and pleasure is, That the Officers and Ministers of his said seuerall Ports, and the Members therof, do returne to His Maiesties said Commissioners for Plantations euery halfe yeare a particular and perfect List of the names and qualities of all such persons as shall from time to time be embarqued in any of the said Ports for any of the said Plantations. And of these His Maiesties Royall Commands, all the Officers and Ministers of his said Ports, and the Members thereof are to take care, as they will answer the neglect thereof at their perils.

Giuen at Our Court at Whitehall the last day of Aprill, in the thirteenth yeare of Our Reigne.

God saue the King.

¶ Imprinted at London by Robert Barker, Printer to the Kings most Excellent Maiestie: And by the Assignes of IOHN BILL. 1637.

FACSIMILE OF A BROADSIDE IN THE PUBLIC LIBRARY OF THE CITY OF BOSTON.
Issued with Bulletin, October, 1894.

Some years before the date of this Proclamation the king's government became alarmed at the self-expatriation of many Puritans of substance to New England. Hutchinson (Hist. of Mass. i. 41) says, "In the year 1635, there was a great addition made to the numbers of inhabitants: among others, Mr. Vane, afterwards Sir Henry Vane, was admitted to the freedom of the colony on the 3d of March; and at the same time Mr. Harlakenden, a gentleman of good family and estate. There were many others; as Mr. Bellingham, Mr. Dummer, of the magistrates; Mr. R. Mather, Mr. Norton, Mr. Shepard and Mr. Peters, of the ministers, who came over in this and the last year, determined to take up their abode, and many other persons of figure and distinction were expected to come over, some of which are said to have been prevented by express order of the king, as Mr. Pym, Mr. Hampden, Sir Arthur Haslerigg, Oliver Cromwell, etc. I know this is questioned by some authors; but it appears plainly, by a letter from Lord Say and Seal to Mr. Vane, and a letter from Mr. Cotton to the same nobleman as I take it, though his name is not mentioned, and an answer to certain demands made by him, that his Lordship himself, and Lord Brooke and others, were not without thought of removing to New-England, and that several other persons of quality were in treaty about their removal also, but undeterminded whether to join the Massachusetts or to settle a new colony."

The emigration became so serious that, in 1637, and probably on the suggestion of Laud, the proclamation here given in fac-simile was issued. Hume thus alludes to it (History of England, chap. 52, § 9): "The puritans, restrained in England, shipped themselves off for America, and laid there the foundations of a government which possessed all the liberty, both civil and religious, of which they found themselves bereaved in their native country: but their enemies, unwilling that they should any where enjoy ease and contentment, and dreading, perhaps, the dangerous consequences of so disaffected a colony, prevailed on the king to issue a proclamation, debarring these devotees access even into those inhospitable deserts. Eight ships, lying in the Thames, and ready to sail were detained by order of the council: and in these were embarked Sir Arthur Haselrig, John Hambden, John Pym, and Oliver Cromwell, who had resolved for ever to abandon their native country, and fly to the other extremity of the globe, where they might enjoy lectures and discourses of any length or form which pleased them. The king had afterwards full leisure to repent this exercise of his authority."

The object of the proclamation was two-fold. First, to quell the rising puritan spirit in England by denying to it the forlorn hope of indulging its "refractory humors" in quiet beyond the Atlantic; for subsidy-men, were not permitted to leave their native land without a license from Her Majesty's Commissioners of Plantations; nor could any one embark who was under the degree of subsidy-man "without an Attestation or Certificate from two Justices of the Peace living next the place where the party last of all, or lately then before dwelt, that he hath taken the Oaths of Supremacie and Allegiance, and like Testimony from the Minister of the Parish of his conversation and conformity to the Orders and discipline of the Church of England."

The other purpose was to restrain the emigration of those whose property was needed for government revenues. These were the subsidy-men, and their character is sufficiently described in the following extract from Hume (History of England, Appendix iv. § 4): "Subsides and fifteenths are frequently mentioned by historians; but neither the amount of these taxes nor the method of levying them have been well explained. It appears, that the fifteenths formerly corresponded to the name, and were that proportionable part of the moveables: but a valuation having been made in the reign of Edward III. that valuation was always adhered to, and each town paid unalterably a particular sum, which the inhabitants themselves assessed on their fellow-citizens. The same tax in corporate towns was called a tenth; because there at first it was a tenth of the moveables. The whole amount of a tenth and a fifteenth throughout the kingdom, or a fifteenth as it is often more concisely called, was about £29,000. The amount of a subsidy was not invariable, like that of a fifteenth. . . . We may learn from the subsidy bills, that one subsidy was given for four shillings in the pound on land, and two shillings and eight pence on moveables throughout the counties; a considerable tax, had it been strictly levied: but this was only the ancient state of a subsidy. During the reign of James, there was not paid the twentieth part of that sum. . . . The advantage of every change was taken against the crown; and the crown could obtain the advantage of none: and to make the matter worse, the alterations which happened in property during this age were generally unfavorable to the crown. The small proprietors, or twenty pound men, went continually to decay; and when their estates were swallowed up by a greater, the new purchaser increased not his subsidy. So loose indeed is the whole method of rating subsides, that the wonder was not how the tax should continually diminish, but how it yielded any revenue at all: it became at last so unequal and uncertain, that the parliament was obliged to change it into a land tax."

The issue of this Proclamation is a stretch of the prerogative, was noticed at the time, and has since passed into the history of England. Although the Proclamation is found in the collections of printed documents of that day, its existence, in an original and perfectly preserved broadside copy, in the Boston Public Library, at the end of two hundred and fifty-seven years is a circumstance of interest, since it was aimed chiefly against the Boston Puritans.
